Abstract

The emphasis on austerity and structural reforms that followed the financial and the euro crisis had severe social implications, which contributed to increase the politicization of the EU to unprecedented levels. The seminar investigates two of the most relevant political responses through which the EU has sought to alleviate social malaise and to shore-up its resilience in today's era of "constraining dissensus": the launch of the Just Transition Fund and the proposal for a directive on adequate minimum wages.

This seminar is funded by the European Union under project SOLID (ERC Synergy Grant 810356)

The seminar will be held in-person and online via MS Teams
